ABOUT THE EVENT

Not only is there an increasing demand for greater transparency and accountability for the use of public funds, citizens are also expecting results from our governments. Measuring outcomes, rather than the 'busy-ness' and activity remains one of the key process challenges that the majority of organisations struggle with most. Despite an increasing shift towards outcome based budgeting, only 6% of Australian public sector organisations have true outcome measurements. So why do so few government departments and agencies measure outcomes successfully, and how can you drive transformation to become outcome focused?

This highly interactive, two day workshop will provide you with the key skills to assess and prepare your organisation to move from an activity-oriented to an outcomes focused organisation. You will learn how to engage teams and explore strategies to identify quantifiable measurements and meaningful outcomes. You will explore how to put in place evaluation strategies with the focus on continual improvement in outcome performance.

As the government outcome-based budgets have recently been reset, here is the opportunity to put in place your strategies for becoming a more-outcomes orientated organisation, demonstrating results for citizens and communities.
